Janet Moyer Landscaping Increases Expertise in Water Management and Conservation

San Francisco – January 21, 2009 --- Janet Moyer Landscaping, a full service residential landscaping company in San Francisco devoted to sustainable practices, announced today that Michael Hofman, the company's executive vice president, has officially completed the California Landscape Contractors Association Water Management Certification Program.

CLCA-certified water managers help their customers to reduce water use and save money. Hofman's attainment required passing a written test and then demonstrating proficiency at required levels for one year on actual landscape sites prior to achieving full certification status.

According to CLCA, many Californians overwater their landscapes by more than 50 percent. Effective water management is not only good for the household budget, but it also enhances landscapes for greater enjoyment and contributes to increasing property values.

Janet Moyer Landscaping has been at the forefront of applying new technologies referred to as "smart water management" systems to residential landscapes. While ordinary irrigation systems cannot adjust to changing weather conditions, new systems use "smart controllers" that draw information daily from weather stations and automatically schedule irrigation based on individual landscape needs and local weather conditions.
